

DOMANDA 1

The most popular drink in Britain is tea: 182 million cups are consumed each day by 77 per cent of the British population. It became popular in the 18th century, when it was imported from China and India.

DOMANDA 2

The British are famous for drinking tea at all times of the day. Whenever people have a few moments to relax during the day, they have a cup of tea. Most English people drink tea with sugar and a lot of milk.

DOMANDA 3

“Tea” may be just a cup of tea that you take quickly during a break, or a social occasion when tea and a variety of biscuits are served. Chatting goes along with sipping the drink. This tradition is slowly disappearing as people are busier than in the past; it is however quite popular with elderly people.

DOMANDA 4

In Italy, tea is more and more popular, but the most popular drink is coffee. According to 2016 data, Italian people drink 6 billion cups of coffee every year. Many Italians have a cup of coffee for breakfast and it is popular to have another one after meals or as a break during the day.

DOMANDA 5

All around the world, everyone thinks that British people drink tea every day at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. In reality, they drink tea at every hour of the day, from the minute they get up to last thing before going to bed. Of course it's quite likely that a British person will drink tea around the middle of the afternoon, but it's also common to drink it with breakfast.

DOMANDA 6

The most popular drink in Britain is tea: 182 million cups are consumed each day by 77 per cent of the British population. It became popular in the 18th century, when it was imported from China and India.

DOMANDA 7

The British are famous for drinking tea at all times of the day. Whenever people have a few moments to relax during the day, they have a cup of tea. Most English people drink tea with sugar and a lot of milk.

DOMANDA 8

“Tea” may be just a cup of tea that you take quickly during a break, or a social occasion when tea and a variety of biscuits are served. Chatting goes along with sipping the drink. This tradition is slowly disappearing as people are busier than in the past; it is however quite popular with elderly people.

DOMANDA 9

In Italy, tea is more and more popular, but the most popular drink is coffee. According to 2016 data, Italian people drink 6 billion cups of coffee every year. Many Italians have a cup of coffee for breakfast and it is popular to have another one after meals or as a break during the day.

DOMANDA 10

All around the world, everyone thinks that British people drink tea every day at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. In reality, they drink tea at every hour of the day, from the minute they get up to last thing before going to bed. Of course it's quite likely that a British person will drink tea around the middle of the afternoon, but it's also common to drink it with breakfast.

DOMANDA 11

The most popular drink in Britain is tea: 182 million cups are consumed each day by 77 per cent of the British population. It became popular in the 18th century, when it was imported from China and India.